chemical analysis that showed how much nearer that day death had tushed its claim upon him. Every week the chemist sent to him personally the analysis that showed to the dying man the ex:00 condition of his blood, the proportion of the albumen that thins the blood down to water in this dread disease. It was hardly a week ago that he was in his office. He came down alone, and while there he received the last bulletin from the chemist. TTERS That bulletin plainly said to the Senator, who now only too well understood its grim language, "Within ten days you shall be in your grave. The Senator remained two hours in his office, locked in his inner room, refused to all callers. From there he returned home, as he knew, to die. Throughout the entire year he has sudious y concealed his condition from his friends, and, to the very last, almost, it has been through his orders that hopes of his improvement have been held out. On Tuesday night his partner, Mr. Coleman, sat up with him. Mr. Carpenter, during the evening, drank quite a quantity of milk revived him to such an extent that the family, who listened to his rational talk, hoped that he was better. Toward morning the Senator was attacked with violest purging and vomiting. This left him very weak. When his Milwaukee physician arrived at 8 30 Wednesday morning. Mr. Carpenter was suffering tortures from pains in his stomach. He was conscious to describe them. He said that the pain was a grawing one, accompanied by darting pains, as if sharp knives were being thrust into him. He said to the doctor: "I must have relief from this pain; I cannot endure this agony."

The doctor then administered a dypodermic injection of morphia. This brought the relief of unconsciousness. The Senator remained under the soothing is fluence of opiates until his death, when his breath came only at long intervals, and after a brief period ceased altogether. During the early morning he roused up enough to recognize his family about him, and then he relapsed into the stuper that preceded his death. New York News.

CIRCULARS VS. NEWSPAPERS.-We have frequency discussed the suice of advertising. and we have put ourselves to the trouble to collect fac s in regard to the various modes, and are perfectly satisfied that prominent newspaper advertisements are worth more than all others. We can prove by any number of CONCORDIA RESTAURANT country merchants that they never open many circulars they receive; that they never examine more and read very few, and we have put ourselves to the troub e to see the evidence in some cases. Except for public sales, exhibi tions, concerts and shows, c reulars and hand bills have gone the way of the walking adver tisemen's and the letters on rocks and fencesthey are lk; all other cheap goods, worth little and would not last long. So personal drumming and sample selling does very well for certain goods and est-blished firms, but like retailing berring, it requires too much labor for the profit. If a man is sent a newspaper he will read it, and when he gets through he will look at the advertisem nes, and it he cannot get other reading, will read them. This is proved by the recovery of things lost by adver tising them, and the sudden appearance of hosts of applicants for an advertised vacant situ ation. A market reper, by a marchant, in a popular paper, is a better advertisement than his price current, or best put up circular sent in an envelope. A witty star local is worth more than a pick of business cards. The chief value of these last is in introducing nobby young clerks at new courthouses.

The truth is, if a merchant wants to be put before the public on the best facting, he musadver is in a paper known to the public and be properly introduced by the editors known to the people. To be introduced and endorsed by an acquaintance or friend is certainly better han handing in your own card uninvited .-Lynchburg Advance.
